Fastest

Cheetahs are the fastest animals on Earth. They can go from 0 mph to 105 kph in just three seconds – that's faster than a sports car accelerating! Think you can outrun one? Think again! The fastest man can run at 43 kph, so a cheetah easily leaves him in the dust.

When at full speed, cheetahs can cover over 6 metres in one stride (the length between their steps) with their feet only touching the ground twice. They also have the best running shoes. Unlike other big cats, they can't draw back their claws, so they grip the ground like spike running shoes. This extra grip means they're just as fast on uneven ground as they are on smooth, open paths! But it's not all about fancy footwear. They also have big lungs which can double their breaths to 150 a minute when running at super high speeds.

What makes these cats such great athletes? Everything about the cheetah is designed for extreme sprinting. They have small, lightweight heads, long legs and a tail that's almost the length of their body. The tail helps them to balance when they spiral and even controls their steering, so that they can take sharp turns like a speed boat.

While cheetahs would be great in a 100 m sprint, they'd be awful in a marathon! They tire out quickly, meaning their hunts, successful or not, are usually over and done with in no more than a minute or so.

Living in the fast lane can be tough for a cheetah. They often have their food stolen by lions and hyenas while they're catching their breath post-hunt! In fact, wild cheetahs usually only survive for 10 years and there are only around 7,000 of these fleet-footed cats left in Africa today.

Slowest

Altogether, they have lived on earth for over 200 million years, which means they were even around during the time of the dinosaurs. They are living proof that slow and steady really does win the race of life.

A tortoise's leisurely lifestyle allows them to live very long lives. One tortoise named Jonathan holds the record of the longest living land animal, reaching the grand old age of 190 years!

Tortoises on the other hand live their life in the slow lane, travelling at a leisurely 0.5 kph, so they couldn't get very far in a hurry. While they wouldn't win any relay races, the slow and steady pace of a tortoise means they can cover up to 6.5 km in a day. Their wide feet and spread out body make it difficult to move fast over land, so they crawl along with caution. Not surprisingly, a group of tortoises is called a creep!

As cold-blooded reptiles, they need the heat of the sun to keep warm. This means they burn much less energy than a cheetah and have a very slow heart rate. But luckily for them, tortoises don't need to hunt for their food like the super-speedy cheetah. Instead, they can chow down on the grass or leaves on the ground whenever they fancy! Another bonus? Tortoise shells are so tough, that in order to stay protected from predators, they can simply tuck themselves inside. Even the strongest animal would have a hard time cracking it.

- Discover a menagerie of peculiar animal pairings compiled to enchant and entertain
- Packed with peculiar pairs, this beautifully illustrated book celebrates the diversity of the animal kingdom. Discover which is the strongest vs weakest, cleverest vs silliest, toughest vs most delicate and many more opposites in this wild parade of mismatches

Sound Learning Listen to Nature

It's nighttime in the forest. Some creatures are going to sleep, but some are just waking up!

Fluffy-tailed squirrels scurry up and down trees, searching for nuts to eat. Press the button to hear her chatter to her friends.

There's an owl perching! Owls are nocturnal, which means they are active at night. Press the button to hear the owl hoot.

It's autumn in the forest.

In the autumn, the leaves on the trees turn orange and start to fall. It's so much fun for foxes to play in the rustling leaves! Press the button to hear him jumping in and out of the piles.

Here's a big brown bear, sniffing around to find food before she hibernates for the winter. She needs to eat a lot of mushrooms to stay full. Press the button to hear her loud growl!
